

Matt graduated summa cum laude from Portland State University in 2018 with a B.S. in Chemistry. A week later, he began his doctoral program at the University of Georgia. There he is working in the Schaefer research group at the Center for Computational Quantum Chemistry. His research is focusing on predictions of the thermochemical and spectroscopic properties of carbon centered radicals and their isomerization products.